

Web Design Midterm: Craigslist Re-design

Robert Craven

In my redesign of craigslist, I approached craigslist's problem of presenting too much information at once with too little concision. Due to the nature of web browsing, vertical scrolling is the primary form of navigation, so I addressed the space problem by organizing the information into dropdown menus and boxes. Taking up less vertical space means less scrolling which in turn means less looking for the information you need.